

Marla Holt is a Post Doc for the Marine Mammal Program. Her research interests include vocal behavior, auditory function, and acoustic localization of marine mammals as well as the effects of sound exposure (both natural and anthropogenic) on these groups of animals. She is currently working on a field study investigating noise effects on the vocal behavior of Southern Resident killer whales and a review paper entitled, "Southern Resident killer whales and sound exposure: A review of current knowledge and data gaps."